

CHICKEN EXPERIMENTS.

Laramie Men Are Still Experimenting with Incubators.

AND THEY EXPECT TO SUCCEED.

Rauner and Sinclair Are Making Careful Tests with a Good Machine.

It is a Great Industry and Would Pay Well in Laramie.

From Wednesday's Daily

One of the most puzzling industries that has ever been undertaken in this section is the chicken raising business by means of incubators and brooders.

In Laramie, however, those who have undertaken the work have never yet made a success of the venture.

C. L. Rauner and L. C. Sinclair now have an incubator in operation in the city.

think they have a genuine old-fashioned mamma. In the brooder are many strips of flannel which dangle down on the backs of the chicks very much as feathers would from a hen.

That is the theory, but the result has been that there have been very few of the incubator dudes to lord it over the ordinary barnyard fowl.

Messrs. Rauner and Sinclair have just put in a hatch of 200 more eggs, and in less than three weeks will know more.

Dr. Stevens was one of the first in this section to try the incubator.

Joe Fisher tried the incubator at his ranch. He succeeded well in hatching but the chickens died afterwards in the brooder.

John Wallis secured eight chickens out of 200 eggs last year. He made but one hatch.

A. Trabing has also experimented with the incubator. It is an amusing fact that many who have failed to hatch a satisfactory per cent of the eggs have excused the fact through various causes.

although Robinson slept on the incubator and succeeded in making good hatches the chickens died afterwards.

Clark Pelton tried his hand at the business but did not meet with success.

Mr. Rathbone, out near Fort Sanders had good success in hatching with an incubator, but lost the chicks in rearing.

Many people, however are raising and marketing one chicken for each two eggs placed in the incubators.

Comparatively few people realize the magnitude and value of the annual poultry and egg production of the United States.

In 1885, the United States with a population of 65,000,000, produced 750,000,000 dozen eggs, which allows, including those consumed by the producer, 140 eggs per capita.

We find that from 1898 to June 1, 1899, the United States statistics report 258,871,125 head of domestic chickens;
